SPRING.

When Winter's rage abates, when cheerful hours
Awake the Spring and Spring awakes the flowers,
On the green turf they careless limbs display,
And celebrate the mighty mother's day;
For then the hills with pleasing shades are crown'd
And sleeps are sweeter on the silken ground;
With milder beams the sun securely shines.

Fat are the lambs and luscious are the wines,
Let every swain adore her power divine,
And milk and honey mix with sparkling wine;
Let all the choir of clowns attend the show,
In long procession, shouting as they go;
Invoking her to bless their yearly stores,
Inviting plenty to their crowded floors.

Thus in the Spring, and thus in Summer's heat,
Before the sickles touch the ripening wheat,
On Ceres' call; and let the labouring hind
With oaken wreaths his hollow temples bind;
On Ceres let him call, and Ceres praise,
With uncouth dances and with country lays.

(Georgics — Translated by John Dryden.)

TRANSLATION OF A POEM BY JULES BRETON, ILLUSTRATING THIS PAINTING.

Among the fresh lilacs, and the new budding leaves,
In this spring-time that hums and smiles through the trees,
On this bright Sabbath day, maids with heavenly brows,
Marching onward to mass, beneath the young boughs:
Did you take from the sky, to commune for God's pleasure,
Your robes of pure white where quivers the azure?

Thus so would I think from your costumes so light
That bloom with the day, like the snow and as bright;
By the vapory veil, with its misty-like flounces,
By your virginal lips, and your sweet modest glances;
By your nosegays of gold, attached to your tapers,
And the heavenly light that illumines your faces.

How each thing around both greets you and blesses;
The mossy thatched roofs have enameled their ridges;
They curve rounding down to contours most supple;
The soft, tender grass does everywhere sparkle:
Still wet by the morn, its white dew breathing odors,
It unrolls to your feet its velvety borders.

Your folds of gauze in the breeze make angelic pinions,
Less white are the doves on the barn's lofty crests;
Less pure is the hawthorn, with its balmy branches;
Thus onward you go to the old chapel's porches;
Where girdled by lindens the church bell is tolling,
While the sun on the tower its corners is gilding.

And spotless you go. The portal unfolds,
Your heart stronger beats, the bell louder tolls;
The aged, quite moved, at the tower's base center,
The door opens wide. Go, gentle maids, enter;
And then from the burning ends of your nun's tapers,
Let bright stars of love float out with its vapors.

Ecstasy! holy fear of mystical raptures
When with your fingers quiver the hymnal's pages
In singing! O sweet tender Jesus, descend!
Ah! come, Divine Spouse, and with our soul blend.
The Host seems to tremble in the hands of the priest,
As seen through the whirl of the incense's mist.

Receive in his body the Lord of the earth;
Daughters, you ignore his mysterious worth;
And to him prefer, resuscitated being
The beautiful crucifix, on the hill dying;
You love its fair forehead, that's torn by the thorn,
And the bleeding wound on its holy side shown.

And above all, you love the child's rosy face,
Bathed, as the fair lamb, in the gold of its fleece;
Who came with its smiles, at the side of your cribs,
And its little clear eyes, when you were all babes;
'Tis for this that you beam, is it not, maiden, say?
And palpitate in the church aisles while you stay.

Vainly all reason succeeds to dead faith,
And no recollection goes forth with your breath
That does not vibrate like a ray from the skies,
So sing, virgins, sing! The glad summer close lies;
Then autumn, whose ripe fruits will fall to the ground;
So to dying spring, let your first chant resound.
